(according to the draft Programme for Human Trafficking Prevention and Control 2009-2012 prepared by the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Lithuania)

The main internal factors that determine human trafficking:

1. Person's unstable material situation that stimulates illegal actions or moving to foreign countries for earnings;
2. Difficulties in entrenchment of gender equality principle and, as a consequence, assessment of a woman as a provider of sexual services;
3. Reduction of the family as a social value role;
4. Praising of money as an essential value in the society, inducing young people to look for easy and fast earnings.

(according to the draft Programme for Human Trafficking Prevention and Control 2009-2012 prepared by the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Lithuania)

The main external (regional and global) factors that determine human trafficking:

1. Large demand of prostitution services in western countries;
2. Active operation of ethnic organised criminal structures in foreign countries;
3. Inconsistent regulation of legal responsibility for human trafficking in different foreign countries.

(according to the draft Programme for Human Trafficking Prevention and Control 2009-2012 prepared by the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Lithuania)

Factors that influence human trafficking:

- Influence of liberalisation of public and personal values caused by globalisation process on the existence of human trafficking phenomena.
Even 32 percent of people, who, according to the data of the IOM DDB were registered as victims of human trafficking in 2008, knew they were going abroad to work in the entertainment area and to render prostitution services.
- Inconsistent regulation of legal responsibility for engagement in prostitution or using prostitution services in foreign countries. Particularly, after Lithuania joined Shengen Space and a visa-free regime with the USA was introduced.
